20th Century Proverbs

- Eternal life does not come by chance; the price was paid at Calvary.
- Even though a man may not know what tomorrow holds, the least he can do is to make provisions for his expectations.
- When you cannot find a solution to your problems, then give the Lord a try.
- When famine is in the land, it is too late to consider the cause; but consideration may prove to be the remedy for future prevention.
- When you are wrecked by the misfortunes of life, don't quit; for experience is the world's best teacher.
- Life is your most fragile possession, but so many people treat it as if it has no end.
- Your carelessness and neglect is a mold of responsibility that another man must shoulder.
- Life without Christ is a hopeless and endless eternity.
- Persistence is no proof of victory; but so often, it is a great aid to one's desire.
- Defeat of purpose brings weariness of heart; but to consider the cause can be the means of overcoming.
- So often, the cause of disaster is the cause of disobedience.
- The desire for worldly gain can be a great snare to the human soul.
- Death is a grim reaper; but, in Christ, there is hope beyond the grave.
- To follow one's passion is to plan your own funeral, and to find full assurance of death.
- Proper expressions can be the road to great treasure.
- The mouth is a gateway to heaven or hell.
- Understanding is life to those who find it, but a bottomless pit to those who refuse instruction.
- God's love in a human heart is the only way He might direct your path.
- Life is your most precious possession, and, at death, your greatest loss is recognized.
- Proverbial expressions or indirect speech may be found to be the solution of one's problem, and the way to avoid offense to the salvation or saving of a soul.
- In the time of a fire, one cannot move the well; but a little forethought can be the means whereby the flames are quenched.
- A hungry dog will bite, but not if he perceives the satisfying of his appetite.
- It is better to quench one's thirst by the act of wisdom than to suffer a lifelong enemy.
- Godly expectations could be the means of prosperity, but when selfishness comes, it interrupts the whole program.
- Hope deferred will sadden the heart, but through the act of effort, one may find the satisfying of his soul.
- Do not mistreat a stranger, for, collectively speaking, you may not know who your visitor is.
- When the storms of life come upon you, it is too late to escape; but if more effort of prevention was offered, then less damage would be accounted for afterward.
- Whosoever speaks because he feels there is much to say is taken by the snare of his own lips, and the lack of understanding identifies him as a fool.
- To agree with a person, when you know he is in error, is a sure way to trouble your own soul.
- Even though life does not consist of the abundance of one's riches, yet the means of plenty can offer much convenience to the needy.
- When your strength is not sufficient for the task, through understanding, a remedy may be found.
- The practice of folly will breed foolishness; but without darkness, there is no development of light.
- Poverty is no proof of defeat, for through much effort, conditions can be changed.
- Success does not depend on one's ability, for men of great understanding have never found the secret.
- The loss of one's honor is a great disaster, but the cause may be found when you consider your negligence.
- The true foundation of life is God, and to build upon truth is to become exceedingly rich.
- It is better to die for a worthy cause than to live under the restraint of evil.
- Let him that kindleth the fire of anxiety and contention beware, lest he, himself be consumed thereby.
- To make known to the human mind that which is unknown, you must use the known for a formula.
- He that considereth the cause of the poor shall be esteemed as great treasure in the eyes of the Master.
- The deeper the water, the greater the challenge; but the pearl of great price shall not be found in shallow places.
- Natural expression is only a veil or covering in which God carefully conceals or hides His treasures.
- A proverbial thought is the hidden expression of God.
- It is a true fact that a man who does not seek wisdom and understanding will, in process of time, discover that he has defeated his own cause.
- Faith is the result of serving God.
- Faith is a subconscious expectation of God's gifts and rewards toward humanity.
- The positive is the inner man, while the negative is the outer man; therefore, the transition from one to the other is the in between.
- Two of the greatest twins in the world are knowledge and effort.

- God is good out of desire, but He brings judgment out of necessity.
- Comprehended truth can do nothing but bring results.
